Dear Society for Chemical Hazard Communication:

On behalf of the U.S. Department of Labor's Occupational Safety and Health Administration, I would like to thank you for your partnership with us for the inaugural Safe + Sound Week. Your support in communicating the value and importance of safety and health programs to your stakeholders was vital to reaching businesses of all sizes and in all industries throughout the nation. Your creativity and persistence in encouraging your network to participate and plan activities for the event week was instrumental to the success of Safe + Sound Week.

Hundreds of participants pre-registered for the event, indicating their intent to host activities for their workplaces. Over 90 trade associations, industry groups, professional societies, and state and local safety and health organizations joined in spreading the message that every business in the United States can and should have a safety and health program and that these programs can prevent injuries and illnesses, reduce business costs, increase productivity, and enhance worker satisfaction.

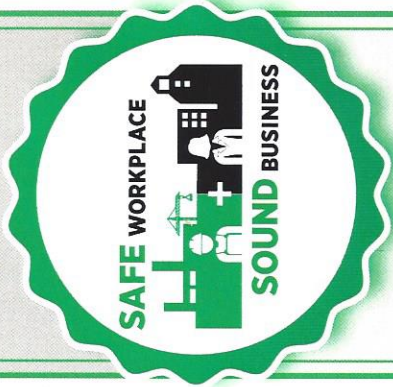

All of this would not have been possible without your support and enthusiasm. I encourage you to continue your partnership with us by becoming a Co-Sponsor for the Safe + Sound Campaign if you have not already done so. Safe + Sound Week was one activity under this umbrella campaign; we anticipate additional efforts in the coming months.

I would once again like to express our gratitude for the Society for Chemical Hazard Communication's willingness to engage with us and your time, energy, and dedication to ensuring safe and healthy workplaces.

Sincerely,
